Japan's Reply to U.S. concerning Our Manchurian Policy

The imperial government expecting to secure your complete adherence to the treaties concluded in "ashington as well as anti-war pact, should like to express our rejoicing at having been able to reascertain our belief that the U.S. government would fully support our imperial government's effort mentioned above. The imperial government, as often declared, regard as his own cardinal policy for Far East the so-called open-door policy to which the ambassador specially refered.

has been conspicuously lessened on account of an unstable situation prevailing throughout China. Imperial government is determined to keep always the open-door policy as much as we can in Manchuria and Mongolia as well as in China proper. Imperial government accepts your proposal described in the ambassador's letter to the effect that the U.S. can not recognize the legality of the items which had been brought about either infringing on the rights of both her government and people or basing on means which stood against the treaty concluded on august, 27, 1927.

To discuss it from purely logical point of view, it should be doubtful whether or not inappropriate means in special cases will always prove futile but our Imperial government having no intention to depend upon inappropriate means, we think such matter as this would actually never occur.

We would, however, just add a word, and that is, in application of treaties concerning China, adquate consideration should always be required for the changes of conditions of the country, and especially her present insecure and disordered condition are what had never been anticipated at the time of agreement of the washington Conference by the countries concerned. Of course even in those days the Chinese condition was not satisfactory, but she had never exposed her discord and lack of unity as at present. As a matter of fact, the biding force and contents of treaties concerned should not to affected by such consideration. And yet, treaties should necessarily be applied in accordance with actual situation. We, thus, think that in application of treaties, extreme consideration of the present condition of China mentioned above is most necessary.

In addition, Our Imperial government wishes to point out the fact that the change of executive authorities of Manchuria and Mongolia was made entirely by the people of those districts to whom it was considered as unavoidable. Even in case of war-time occupation the nature of which is different from our present military action, it is a usual custom for local authorities to remain in their office. In the late incident, however, most of the Chinese authorities in Manchuria and Mongolia have either run away or resigned, resulting in collapse of political functions. Our Imperial government believes that it should be unreasonable to think that the Chinese are unlike other nations, incapable of self-determination and formation of a new government on their own initiatives to maintain order after the authorities had escaped. That the Imperial government has no territorial ambition in Manchuria and Mongolia, needs no furthur declaration. But, as the ambassador knows well, maintenance of security and welfare in Manchuria and Mongolia and opening of these districts for general commerce are for us matters of the greatest concern and . . importance. Our Imperial government wishes to be allowed to express her full delights to know that the U.S. government who has thus far on various occasions made clear her intention not to overlock the importance of matters concerning Far East . with friendly spirit making the most careful efforts to get a right recognition of the situation when it becames so important a matter as to affect our very existence.
